Landscapes

Landscape photography is where it all started for me. Coming from a background in landscape design, I've always been interested in how people experience a place — its scale, atmosphere, history, and the way nature changes it over time.

Photography became a way for me to step into those spaces and try to capture what makes them worth experiencing. In many ways, it is the same storytelling approach I bring to photographing people: looking beyond what is immediately visible and trying to understand what makes a moment or place meaningful.
